Double Blessing
by Julie Yerger, Rwanda

Kibogora Hospital is a rural mission hospital in western Rwanda, caring for patients even if they cannot afford their treatment. But with missions comes a double blessing: those who are cared for and those who want to care. Local churches, wanting to care, have partnered with Kibogora by donating food to Kibogora's nutrition program.

In third world hospitals patients must bring a caregiver to cook and care for them. If a patient has no food or caregiver, the hospital's nutrition program prepares and distributes this donated food: cassava, sweet potatoes, cabbage, avocados, different kinds of flour (soy, sorghum, and cassava, also known as manioc), rice, beans, sugar cane, plantain bananas and more.

Matthew 25:40 expresses the double blessing of missions, "The King will reply, 'Truly I tell you, whatever you did for one of the least of these brothers and sisters of mine, you did for me.'"
