

together | everywhere

Together with all those everywhere who call on the name of our Lord Jesus Christ
1 Corinthians 1:2

by Keith, Creative Access Worker

Keith, a teacher trainer, shares these three examples of how teaching not only impacts the student, but also prepares the student to impact those around them.

Glimpse of the Future

I think I saw a glimpse of the future.

A top factory manager asked me to teach his managers the course “New Life,” a simple discipleship manual on the good news. I could easily teach it on my own, but I had a thought: Why not bring one of my students along to co-teach with me so I could coach him?

I told the top manager, “I’ll come on one condition ... that you let one of my student teachers co-teach with me.”

Gideon, one of my students, joined me to teach chapters one, three and five. I was proud of him. He gave a good introduction to each chapter and threw in lots of illustrations and application points.

I see a bright future for Gideon and his prospective students.

Sharing the Good News

This great homework report came from one of my student teachers: “Thank Father for his grace. Our group traveled up north for a short term outreach trip. On the plane, I was reading my Company History textbook when the passenger next to me asked me what I was reading. I felt moved to give her a little history and share the good news with her. Sure enough, after listening a bit, she wanted to accept the good news and go to a factory after returning home.” I had assigned my teachers reading from the text book, little knowing the eternal fruit that would result from it!

Teaching for Life Change

“I taught the Christian family course while you were gone this summer,” said Nancy, one of my student teachers.

“How did your students like it?” I followed up.

She replied, “One of the couples in my class was talking about divorce. After taking the course, they changed their minds and decided to stay together!”

That’s real teaching for life change!

Note: This worker has written using substitutions for words that might draw attention to his Christian witness in this creative access country. Following is a key.

Factory – church

Father – God

Factory manager – pastor

Company History textbook – Bible

together | everywhere

Together with all those everywhere who call on the name of our Lord Jesus Christ
1 Corinthians 1:2

by Keith, Creative Access Worker

Keith, a teacher trainer, shares these three examples of how teaching not only impacts the student, but also prepares the student to impact those around them.

Glimpse of the Future

I think I saw a glimpse of the future.

A top factory manager asked me to teach his managers the course “New Life,” a simple discipleship manual on the good news. I could easily teach it on my own, but I had a thought: Why not bring one of my students along to co-teach with me so I could coach him?

I told the top manager, “I’ll come on one condition ... that you let one of my student teachers co-teach with me.”

Gideon, one of my students, joined me to teach chapters one, three and five. I was proud of him. He gave a good introduction to each chapter and threw in lots of illustrations and application points.

I see a bright future for Gideon and his prospective students.

Sharing the Good News

This great homework report came from one of my student teachers: “Thank Father for his grace. Our group traveled up north for a short term outreach trip. On the plane, I was reading my Company History textbook when the passenger next to me asked me what I was reading. I felt moved to give her a little history and share the good news with her. Sure enough, after listening a bit, she wanted to accept the good news and go to a factory after returning home.” I had assigned my teachers reading from the text book, little knowing the eternal fruit that would result from it!

Teaching for Life Change

“I taught the Christian family course while you were gone this summer,” said Nancy, one of my student teachers.

“How did your students like it?” I followed up.

She replied, “One of the couples in my class was talking about divorce. After taking the course, they changed their minds and decided to stay together!”

That’s real teaching for life change!

Note: This worker has written using substitutions for words that might draw attention to his Christian witness in this creative access country. Following is a key.

Factory – church

Father – God

Factory manager – pastor

Company History textbook – Bible